

Jay Walking In Vegas

By Stephen Montagne

Logline: A down on his luck comedian, hoping to resurrect his career in Vegas, has a public meltdown, and all-night bender, that results in him bonding with a teenage prostitute.

Comedian Jay Walker is being grilled in an on-camera interview session by a feminist 24/7 cable news host about his life choices, and confronts him about an encounter with a Las Vegas prostitute. Cut to one month earlier: Jay is in a rundown hotel, in the seediest part of Vegas. Jay complains to his agent about losing his cell phone. To raise his spirits, the agent informs him a comedy scout will see his act that night in the worst comedy lounge in downtown Vegas.

His self-destructive personality causes him to make a bride-to-be cry during her bachelorette party, insult the comedy scout and have a meltdown on stage, which leads to his banishment from the club. Now on a quest for a cell phone, Jay encounters an array of colorful characters that illuminate how shitty his life is.

Walking defeated, up rolls a white stretch limo and out pops the glittery entourage of comedian Dane Cook. Jay's troubles are revealed when he joins Cook at a decadent party in a luxury penthouse suite. Cook suggests Jay clear his head via a working girl.

Jay agrees and heads into the night to find a prostitute... who ends up robbing him which causes him to contemplate suicide by drinking himself to death. He goes to a bar where a smooth-talking pimp offers him a night with an "affordable" hooker to go out on a happy note.

When the prostitute arrives, she's clearly underage. Jay's new mission is to do one good deed and help her escape prostitution... but ends up getting arrested for soliciting an underage prostitute instead. At the precinct, he explains the whole situation to the officers who realize he's not a criminal and let him walk.

Back in Los Angeles, Jay discovers his misadventures made him a viral sensation, along with the contentious interview session with the feminist interviewer. Jay's career is re-launched and the prostitute moves in with Jay where they being a father/daughter relationship, while Jay starts a new career as a self-styled podcaster from his garage.
